The Assisted Living program is a component of Canada's social safety net meant to align with similar provincial and territorial programs. The objective of the Assisted Living program is that in-home, group-home and institutional care supports are accessible to eligible low-income individuals to help maintain their independence for as long as possible. This residency-based program provides funding to First Nations, provinces and Yukon Territory on an annual basis through negotiated funding agreements for non-medical social supports, as well as training and support for service delivery so that seniors and persons with disabilities can maintain functional independence within their home communities. There are 3 major components to the program: in-home care, adult foster care and institutional care. The Assisted Living program is available to all individuals ordinarily resident on reserve, who have been formally assessed by a health care professional, in a manner aligned with the relevant provincial or territorial legislation and standards as requiring services, and who do not have the financial means to obtain such services themselves.
